Algers, the White City! Its story runs from Hercules and the Golden Age to the Middle Ages, and the famous chronicles of Numidian, Roman, Vandal, Byzantine, Arab and Turkish, and the passage of power to Napoleon III, and the French republic. Not a century ago it was the most beautiful of the world's cities, and most beautiful of the cities that the world has ever known. It is now a beautiful city of modern France.

Its people, its gay life, its great streets, its gardens, its fountains, are being loaded with the produce of a beautiful land; its wharves are piled high with the goods of the world, and its people are the most happy people on earth. It is a city of the future, and its people are the people of the future.

Alains, under the plain fortress of the Dey, the tyrant of Algiers, who claimed his share of the booty that each murderous swoof brought home, who had been the first to pluck the towns on European shores, or weeping women from Italy, France and Spain.

Houses of the Natives.

The houses hemming the streets thrust out their upper stories, supported by slender columns, and although they are not a yard apart, often they are built completely across, so that the narrow lane must pass under and emerges on a wider space, a narrow street, or a square, where the rough stalls are meat, fruit, vegetable, bread, and the like.

Many negro dealers show their wares and prices in Arabic in French, while tall men in white burnouses, shrouded Moorish women and der-chahred, bare-headed men, girls chatter and bangle their ear-rings and sell shako their hats, and the women of the Arab world, with their wigs, call on Allah or the God of Christians to bear witness, then quit down and conclude the deal peaceably.
